Students of EMU Communication Faculty Gain International Success

Eastern Mediterranean University, Communication Faculty, Visual Arts and Visual Communication Design students managed to appear within the top 100 among 6,993 poster designs in Paris-based, non-profit organisation 4tomorrow's "Poster for Tomorrow" project. With the aim of promoting active citizenship through the medium of design, 4tomorrow works towards encouraging people, both those in and outside the design community, to make posters to stimulate debate in the local and international communities on issues that affect us all. The organisation has received over 15,000 posters from 133 countries and hosted more than 400 exhibitions in 5 continents so far. In line with this year's theme "Freedom of Movement", EMU Communication Faculty, Visual Arts and Visual Communication Design Postgraduate students Farzin Faroutan and Undergraduate student Abanu Soliman's entry made it to the top 100 designs amongst 6,993 entries. Postgraduate students Negar Chahian, Amer Taher and Ebal A. S. Alamari's designs made it into the top 400.

"Now It's Time to Raise Awareness Regarding Human Rights"

Poster designs of the aforesaid students of EMU appeared at exhibitions in France, the USA, Brazil, Russia, Iran, Morocco and Turkey on 7 December 2017. Another national poster design exhibition will be launched at EMU on 14 March 2018. During the exhibition, one of the directors of "Poster for Tomorrow" project Herve Matine will be delivering a seminar.

Chair of the Visual Arts and Visual Communication Design Department Assoc. Prof. Dr. Senih Çavuşoğlu, who provided assistance during the poster design stage of the said students, stated that the freedom of movement is a human right and awareness need to be raised regarding the difficulties encountered by those who have to relocate due to wars. In this respect, poster designs on this issue carry special importance. Assoc. Prof. Dr. Çavuşoğlu added that people from different nations bring color and life to the world and that closing borders to travelers and building walls to keep people outside will ensure a dark future for humanity.

Founder of T24 Doğan Akın Delivers Talk at EMU

A talk titled "Internet Journalism" was organized by the Eastern Mediterranean University (EMU) Communication Faculty, Department of New Media and Journalism on Friday, the 8th of December 2017. Guest speaker at the talk that commenced at 10:30 in the Purple Hall was internet newspaper T24's founder Doğan Akın. Delivering the opening speech, EMU Communication Faculty, Department of New Media and Journalism Chair Assoc. Prof. Dr.

Nurten Kara thanked all participants stating that they welcomed Doğan Akın to the university 2 years earlier and that they are very happy to see him back once again. Doğan Akın expressed his happiness regarding being back at the university for the second time. Stating that with the internet, journalism gained the means to produce an almost real-time broadcast Akın highlighted that they upload approximately 250 news items a day to T24, highlighting that this requires correct editor supervision and working at a high speed.

The Importance of Low Cost Discussed

Noting that he doesn't agree with those who believe that journalism is a profession that is going to be obsolete Akın highlighted that the vast amount of information flowing through the internet needs to go through the filter of good journalists stating that this requirement has elevated the standards of the profession. Indicating that the field of conventional media requires serious expenditure Akın noted that low cost journalism has been made possible by the internet. Pointing out that social media usage in the TRNC is very high, Akın highlighted that this leads to citizen journalism coming into prominence. Underlining the need to be familiar with algorithms in internet advertising in order to carry out independent journalism Akın stated that this is how news portals survive. The talk came to a close after a group photo was taken.
